
Once, a Blue Moon

It happens ever so rarely
You meet someone and feel they're the one
And you just know, for you have a glow

But after a phase, you might realize
When your energy doesn't yield synergy
You lose your way recognizing it may only be one-way

A crushing feeling takes hold, truth be told
Closure comes as you regain composure
A connection of cosmic proportions
Can only flourish through effortless magic

Venus & Saturn

Two lights that only met in passing sight
With timing and distance aligned at night

On the summer solstice, we began
In an ordinary aisle, under fluorescent plan
Where nothing celestial was meant to land

Conversation flowing, unclaimed and free
I mistook proximity for clarity
And called it more than it could be

Your presence rearranged the air
Not as promise, but as flare
A brightness I began to wear

When you smiled, I filled in the rest
Wrote constellations across your chest
And called the guesswork something blessed

For Venus and Saturn do not touch
They only appear to, just enough
