
Once, a Blue Moon

*It happens ever so rarely
You meet someone and feel they're the one
And you just know, for you have a glow*

*But after a phase, you might realize
When your energy doesn't yield synergy
You lose your way recognizing it may only be one-way*

*A crushing feeling takes hold, truth be told Closure comes as you regain composure
A connection of cosmic proportions
Can only flourish through effortless magic*

Venus & Saturn

*Two lights that only met in passing sight
With timing and distance aligned at night*

*On the summer solstice, we began
In an ordinary aisle, under fluorescent plan
Where nothing celestial was meant to land*

*Conversation flowing, unclaimed and free
I mistook proximity for clarity
And called it more than it could be*

*Your presence rearranged the air
Not as promise, but as flare
A brightness I began to wear*

*When you smiled, I filled in the rest
Wrote constellations across your chest
And called the guesswork something blessed*

*For Venus and Saturn do not touch
They only appear to, just enough*
